The real enemy is not next door. He is not human flesh and blood. The real enemy has been given temporary rule over this world and seeks to destroy us by leading us to rebel against the Creator. And he extends his rule when he convinces us that rather than battling against him, we battle against the enemy next door.

Finally, let me add that sometimes the enemy next door is not even human. It could be an educational system trying to teach your child otherwise or even social media and the internet. The responsibility, therefore, lies on us to watch out for these enemies, as they could be lurking next door, closer than think and if allowed to carry out their intentions might scar our children for life.

A compelling drama series about life in the British Channel Islands under German occupation during World War II: passionate battles against restraint, pragmatic struggles with principle and internal conflicts rage as fiercely as those on the battlefield. Ultimately, both sides find they are compromised as much by the actions of their compatriots as they are by the enemy that is always at the door.
