The New Food Anxiety. Food shapes our identity and influences how we see the world. Our food is better than ever. So why do we worry so much about what we eat? An emerging psychology of food reveals that when we swap sit-down for take-out, we cut our emotional ties to the table and food ends up fueling our worst fears. Call it spiritual anorexia.

The basis for your food identity is formed here, your relationship and conception of food. We're not the first to talk about this - food identity is something that's been well-researched in academia - and is well documented in all cultural explorations. Our food identities are often expressions of cultural identity alongside our personal ones.

If we don't get the right information, our metabolic processes suffer and our health declines. If we get too much food, or food that gives our bodies the wrong instructions, we can become overweight, undernourished, and at risk for the development of diseases and conditions, such as arthritis, diabetes, and heart disease. In short, what we eat is central to our health.
